Data Listener Class Diagram

The main DataListener abstract class is extended by specific ways to process data in real time, such as the TCPDataListener, the WebSocketDataListener or the FileDataListener. It then sends the data it has received to the DataParser for further processing into a reasonable format, for example a PatientRecord object, and then hands this off to the DataSourceAdapter to handle further processing, and storing the received data.